

The Mystical Moment of Becoming

Received February 27th, 2008

You find yourself sitting here, unable to leave, but unable to stay. You are in a moment of change where what has been is soon to end and what will be has not yet begun. Times such as this are miraculous; they are the birthplace of becoming. They are the repository of all life's origins, the Energy of potential, the possibility of what if...

You have witnessed others who have come to such a time as this. You have told them in the midst of their confusion or concern that they are bless-ed, that they are on the threshold of something extraordinary and exquisite. Yet you, yourself, have failed to recognize that as your Truth. Having only eyes for what will be, you do not see what is, right now.

There is so much that you will become, but do not miss the instant of becoming it. For it is in that moment that God reaches down Its hand, the greater Source of All That Is enters into your heart and mind and sparks something miraculous—a courage, a wish, a bravery that can drive into completion all that will be, a vision from which all that becomes will have its blueprint.

Do not miss this moment, this instant of sparking, this moment of igniting, for it is a time that knows only a brief explosion of itself and then it is gone, becoming what is yet to be and having relinquished all that has been. Do not be so enthralled by what will be or what has come before. To do so is to ignore the instant that is Now, the moment of transformation, the experience of the turning. It is but a brief period in time and it is one you do not want to miss.

For it is in that moment that life is in its truest, most primordial form. The moment of becoming—after the moment of conception, before the moment of manifestation—is that period of time that is uniquely in limbo. Although it is painful, it is nonetheless its own miraculous self and there are none that can stand up to it.

Be soft and kind with yourself during this time. Your becoming is long and has been drawn out for some time. The labor will last for months and in its end it will have lasted for a few years. But that does not matter, for the becoming itself is a joyful process. It can be fraught with worry, filled with anxiety and concerns if you live in the past or the future. But if you look for the sweetness in each moment and therein practice patience, you will find that this time in between is miraculous. And while you are holding yourself still and repeating the mantra, “It will come and I will know it,” you are able to enjoy the sweetness and richness of the becoming, itself.
